

About using other languages on your Mac

You can change the language shown in menus and dialogs; see dates, times, and numbers displayed according to the conventions of a geographic region; and even write in a language that uses a different writing system (or “script”) from your MAC without having the keyboard that’s designed for that language. You set these options using International preferences (choose Apple menu > System Preferences and click International).

If you set up your computer to write in more than one language or to type special characters (for example, mathematical symbols or arrows), the Input Menu appears as a flag on the right side of the menu bar. When you want to type in another language or type special characters or symbols, you choose an item from the Input menu.

You can also view multilingual text documents on your computer. Applications that support Unicode, a worldwide standard for encoding multilingual text, can display any language. Other applications may not support all languages and you may see missing or strange characters in the text. If you have trouble viewing multilingual text, open the document using a Unicode application, such as TextEdit.

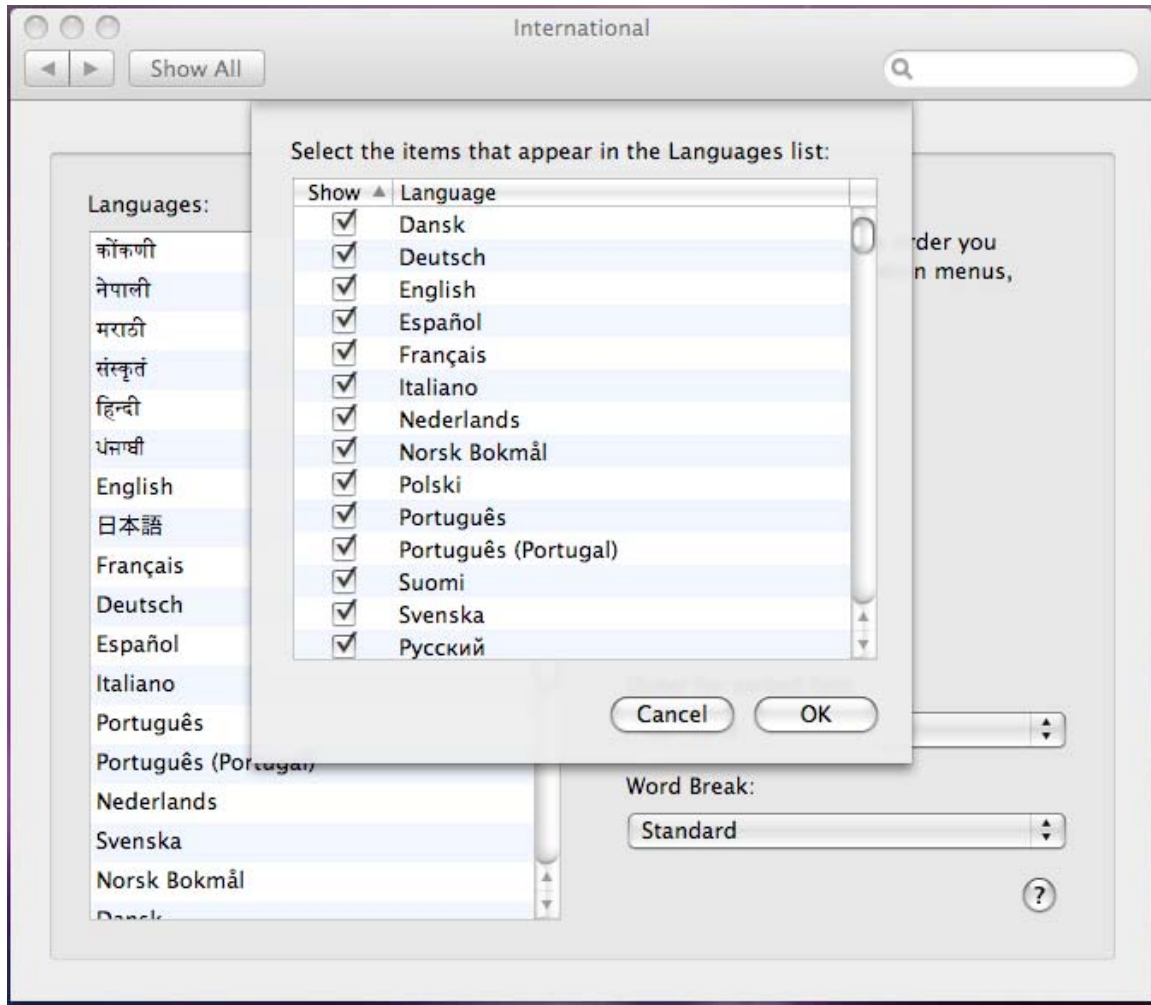

The applications that came with your computer let you write in any language that Mac OS X supports. However, not all applications let you change the language shown in menus and dialogs. To see what languages an application supports, select the application icon, then choose File > Get Info, and click the Languages triangle.

The various screens for setting up extended language support are shown on subsequent pages.

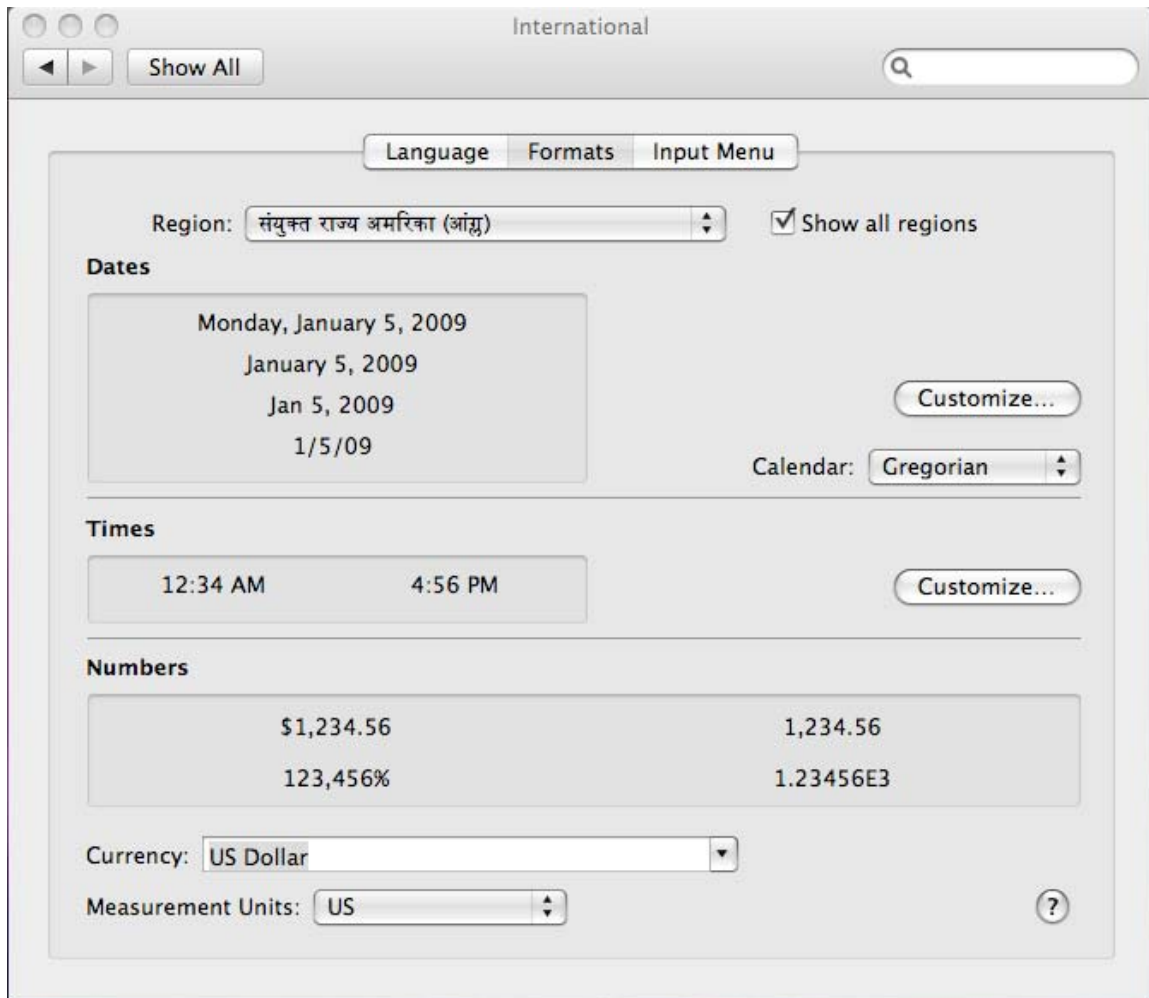

International Language Screen

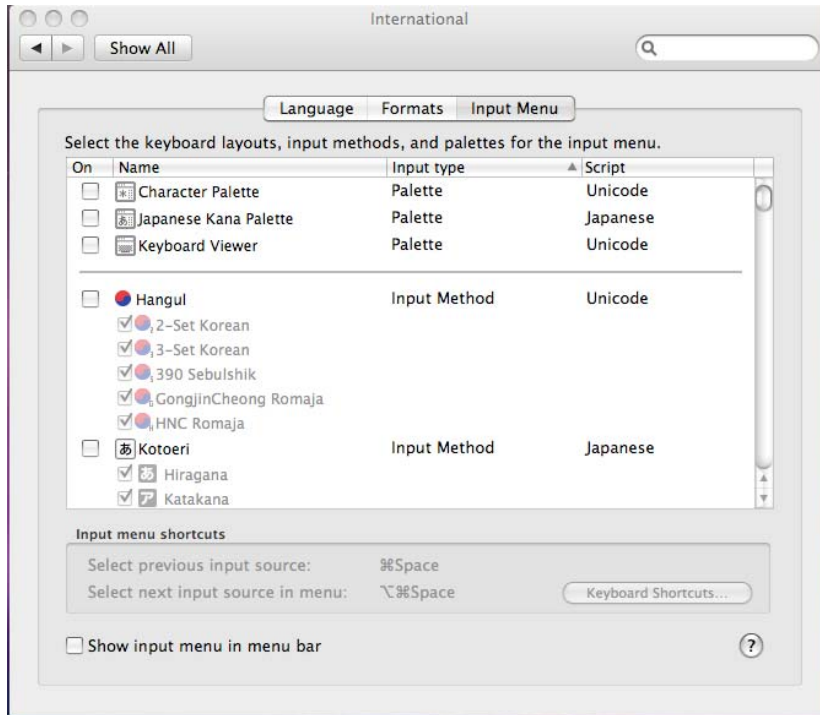

International Language Edit Screen

International Formats Screen

International Input Menu Screen

About Argo Translation

Having successfully executed projects requiring simultaneous translations in 46 different languages, ARGO Translation provides specialized and professional translation services for a multitude of domains ranging from legal and technical to marketing and financial and everything in between. Argo provides efficient, accurate translation and localization services focused on quality and clarity for a wide range of companies across North America.

Argo Translation

2420 Ravine Way, Suite 200
 Glenview IL 60025 USA
 847.230.9870
 www.argotrans.com

